

Catholic Social Thought and Wages

By Fred Kammer, S.J.

“Setting a minimum wage and requiring such benefits as social security, workers’ compensation, and unemployment compensation are ways in which governments historically have acted to protect worker dignity, encourage family formation, and ensure the basic rights and needs of children and those who are poor.”

Discussion about wages in Catholic social thought (CST) revolve around two key principles. The first is the just wage, meaning that wages that do not allow workers to support themselves, their families, or the common good demean human dignity and human life. The Catechism of the Catholic Church, citing the Second Vatican Council, spells it out this way:

A just wage is the legitimate fruit of work. To refuse or withhold it can be a grave injustice. In determining fair pay both the needs and the contributions of each person must be taken into account. “Remuneration for work should guarantee man the opportunity to provide a dignified livelihood for himself and his family on the material, social, cultural, and spiritual level, taking into account the role and the productivity of each, the state of the business, and the common good.” Agreement between the parties is not sufficient to justify morally the amount to be received in wages.¹

Rooted in the most fundamental principle of human dignity, modern CST has developed the concept of a just family wage, first enunciated in 1891,² to include the provision of such social benefits as health care, coverage of work accidents, inexpensive or free medical assistance for workers and families, old age pensions and insurance, and appropriate vacations and holidays as expressions of the economic rights of the human person.³ These duties to pay just wages and benefits fall primarily on employers. “They commit grave injustice who refuse to pay a just wage or who do not give it in due time and in proportion to work done.”⁴

Some will argue that the marketplace determines the level of wages and that markets should be allowed to function freely and without interference. CST always has endorsed the potential benefits and freedoms of a market economy. It also has noted that in industrialized societies entrepreneurs, “following the principle of maximum profit, tried to establish the lowest possible wages for the work done by the employees.”⁵

CST thus teaches as a second principle that, in addition to the moral duty of employers, government's responsibility for the common good includes protection of human rights and the rights of workers. As St. John XXIII explained:

A LIVING WAGE IS A MORAL VALUE.

As for the State, its whole purpose is the realization of the common good in the temporal order. It cannot, therefore, hold aloof from economic matters. On the contrary, it must do all in its power to promote the production of a sufficient supply of material goods, "the use of which is necessary for the practice of virtue." It has also the duty to protect the rights of all its people, and particularly of its weaker members, the workers, women and children. It can never be right for the State to shirk its obligation of working actively for the betterment of the condition of the workingman.⁶

Setting a minimum wage and requiring such benefits as social security, workers' compensation, and unemployment compensation are ways in which governments have acted historically to protect worker dignity, encourage family formation, and ensure the basic rights and needs of children and those who are poor. CST has strongly supported these developments.

The failure to set a minimum wage and to provide for appropriate benefits is a failure in the duty of government officials to workers and their families in keeping with government's responsibility for the common good.

Fr. Fred Kammer, S.J., serves as the Director of the Jesuit Social Research Institute Loyola University in Louisiana, New Orleans. For more information on the JSRI: <http://www.loyno.edu/jsri/justsouth-quarterly>
(Printed with permission.)

ENDNOTES

- 1 Libreria Editrice Vaticana, Catechism of the Catholic Church, 1992, no. 2434.
- 2 Pope Leo XIII, Rerum Novarum, 1891, nos. 63 and 65.
- 3 St. John Paul II, Laborem Exercens (On Human Work), 1981, no. 19.
- 4 Pontifical Council on Justice and Peace, Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church, 2005, no. 302, citing the following passages from Scripture: Lv. 19:13; Dt. 24:14-15; Jas 5:4.
- 5 St. John Paul II, op.cit., no. 11.
- 6 St. John XXIII, Mater et Magistra (Mother and Teacher), 1961, no. 20.

REFLECTION QUESTIONS

1. Reread what the Catholic Catechism says about just wages. What does the inclusion of this message in a catechism of our Faith's basic beliefs indicate about its importance? What is the message about workers' pay that is proclaimed in the secular world? What values does our Church promote about workers and how do these contrast with values of the marketplace economy?
2. Workers making the Federal Minimum wage, which state laws cannot go below, could work full time, as of 2014, and still be counted as below the U.S. poverty line. What do you know about the recent attempts to raise the minimum wage in many states? Who has supported raising the wage? Who have been against it and why? Some states, such as Maryland, have already passed legislation to raise the minimum wage; why is it slowly being seen as an important concern in these states?
3. Why do so many look down on people who work in "menial" jobs and what does this tell us about the values of our culture? What kind of stigma is often attached to such jobs and often to the people who toil in them? How can we grow in respect of other's work, especially work in low-skill, low paying jobs? How can we better support all workers in our nation and around the world?

FAITH IN ACTION

1. For campaigns on raising the minimum wage, see:
 - <http://www.raisetheminimumwage.org>
 - <https://www.whitehouse.gov/raise-the-wage>
2. Learn about the work of the Interfaith Workers Justice organization: www.iwj.org
3. Tell Congress it's time to raise the federal minimum wage. <http://bit.ly/1GoME5N>

PRAYER

Christ the Worker, help us recognize that all human work has been elevated by you and is sacred in your sight.

Challenge us to learn more about just wages in our Church's teachings, and call us to support policies and legislation that provide living wages, important benefits, healthy, and safe working conditions for all those who toil for their daily bread.

Help us to respect all forms of work and all workers, and to grow in sensitivity and concern for those in menial jobs and for all workers. Amen.

